Mayor admits Liberals, NDP tried to woo him

Politics. But Robertson insists he's seeking another term in Vancouver, not a federal seat in Ottawa

Gregor Robertson and Justin Trudeau together in June. INSTAGRAM

Mayor Gregor Robertson confirmed rumours Tuesday that the Liberals and NDP have tried to recruit him to run federally for them in 2015 — but repeated that he's not interested.

"Both the federal Liberals and the NDP have informally raised the idea of serving at different levels of government, but I have been clear that I will be running for a third term as mayor next year," he said in an email to Metro.

"My focus is on continuing our important progress at city hall, on issues such as tackling housing affordability and homelessness, improving transit, and growing Vancouver's economy."

He tried to sidestep the question earlier in the day at a press conference, the first he has held since some media reported on Aug. 29 that he had been approached by Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau.

"Did any of those conversations take place with Tom Mulcair or Justin Trudeau?" he was asked Tuesday morning.

"No, not directly," he told reporters.

"I think Justin Trudeau asked the entire (Federation of Canadian Municipalities) audience if they'd run for federal politics, and it's always been a source locally for candidates for federal and provincial (politics), so they're always pitching it and that's part of the deal."

He said he has no particular ideas about what he wants to do after civic politics.

"I haven't been thinking about it, no.... My background's in business, so long-term I had always assumed I'd be back in business, so I don't go there."

Robertson, a former NDP MLA, confirmed he has not been a member of any political party other than Vision since taking the mayor's chair.

"People can rumour and speculate about all this, that's part of politics," he said. "But I stay focused on my job."

City to finally install Olympic statue of Greek goddess Nike

Just do it, already.
Design, engineering problems prevented officials from installing gift received in 2009 from Ancient Olympia

EMILY JACKSON
emily.jackson@metronews.ca

For the past four years a bronze, four-metre-tall, 900-kilogram statue of Nike, the Greek goddess of victory, has sat in the protective crate in which it was shipped under cover at Vancouver's city works yard.

The gift from Ancient Olympia, which has presented host cities a similar gift since the 1990s, will be installed at Cordova and Thurlow this month, said Bryan Newson, director of the city's public-art program.

While London managed to install its Nike statue in Greenwich months after the Games, design and engineering problems have prevented Vancouver from doing so, Newson said.

"Finding a site for a piece that's pre-determined and pre-built is not as easy as people imagine," Newson said — especially since the city didn't anticipate the gift when it arrived in the hectic months before the Games.

"I got a phone call one day saying, 'We've got a big package here for you,'" he said. "It was very welcome, but we didn't expect it."

Once it was clear there was "no way" the city could get it up for the Games, it decided to take the time to find a really good site and install it well, he said.

Attempts to place the statue at Queen Elizabeth Park and Jack Poole Plaza failed, as the statue was too heavy for the former and too close to the Olympic cauldron for the latter.

When the city finally landed the downtown site, the issue became designing a plinth that could withhold the statue's weight. Since it will be placed on a median, it's subject to national transportation standards to ensure safety if it's hit by a car or a truck, Newson said.

"We're now confident that we have a good site. We think it's going to do the statue proud," he said.

See it for yourself

Vancouverites will be invited to a formal dedication ceremony some time in October.

Dix to announce future plans next week: NDP

NDP Leader Adrian Dix is set to make an announcement on his future.
MATT KIELTYKA/METRO FILE

New Democratic Party Leader Adrian Dix will make an announcement next week concerning his political future.

NDP communication director Tim Pearson says a time, date or location for the Dix announcement has not been set, but it will occur some time next week.

Dix left the B.C. legislature in July, saying he would be taking time to reflect on his political future.

Since then, there has been little information coming forward from Dix, but others from within the NDP have been publicly calling for him to signal that he is preparing to step down.

Earlier this week, a group of New Democrats calling themselves Forward BC NDP announced they were seeking to modernize and rebuild the party and aiming to influence the selection of party delegates voting at the NDP's Vancouver convention in November.

The convention will see the election of a new party executive and could prompt a party leadership race.

The B.C. New Democrats have been reeling since last May's devastating election loss, in which they entered the race with an almost 20-point lead but lost to Premier Christy Clark's Liberals.

Serious injuries

Boy struck by car, thrown into bus

A 13-year-old boy was rushed to hospital with serious injuries after being struck by a car at Cambie Street and West 20th Avenue on Tuesday around 4 p.m.

The boy appeared to be running across Cambie at a pedestrian-controlled intersection when the accident occurred, Sgt. Randy Fincham said in an email.

"The force of the collision caused the young boy to make contact with a bus that was stopped near the intersection," Fincham said.

The driver of the car remained at the scene. EMILY JACKSON/METRO

Crisis creates city housing position

In its never-ending quest for affordable housing, the City of Vancouver has appointed its first chief housing officer.

It will be the job of Mukhtar Latif, a housing and development consultant from the U.K., to figure out how to get more Vancouverites into more affordable housing, according to a city news release sent Tuesday.

Latif is expected to work with developers, not-for-profits and the federal and provincial governments. He has experience in both the private and public sectors and has secured housing for the elderly along with developing market price homes. EMILY JACKSON/METRO

Premier too busy for legislature

No fall sitting. Clark to spend season talking to voters, travelling to Asia for trade mission

Premier Christy Clark addresses the media in Vancouver on Tuesday.
SAM SMITH/FOR METRO

B.C. Premier Christy Clark says her government is too busy working to have a fall sitting of the B.C. legislature.

Instead, she says MLAs and legislative-committee members are going to be spending the coming months talking to British Columbians about how the Liberal government can deliver on its campaign promises.

"There are two ways you can go about running government," she said. "One of them is to close yourself off in Victoria, figure out what legislation is going to look like and impose it on people without talking to them about it.

"I'm not going to be that kind of premier," she said.

Furthermore, Clark says the only session the provincial government must attend is in the spring and they did more than that by having a summer session.

"We sat all summer, making sure we passed that balanced budget," she said.

In the latest quarterly report, Finance Minister Mike de Jong downgraded the government's surplus budget forecast from $197 million to $136 million.

The government is still projecting a balanced budget in February, but by a slim margin.

In November, Clark will be taking a trip to China, Korea and Japan to promote B.C.'s as yet-to-be developed liquefied-natural-gas industry.

Clark claims the industry could create up to 100,000 new jobs and that Asia will play a significant role.

"My team has a very simple goal on this trade mission," she said. "And that's to get the message out about British Columbia, the people here, and what we produce." WITH FILES FROM THE CANADIAN PRESS

Pitbulls picked on in Burnaby? Advocates call for end to focus on breed

Local pitbull advocates were left shaking their heads in surprise and disappointment when Burnaby proposed harsher bylaws against vicious dogs at a city council meeting this week.

Instead of nixing the breed-specific legislation as proposed last year by HugABull director Kristen Neratini, a city staff report recommended increasing licence fees, off-leash fines and impound periods for vicious dogs — which includes animals that have a history of unprovoked biting or any canine that looks like a pitbull.

It's the opposite route municipalities such as Coquitlam and New Westminster have taken, Neratini said Tuesday. Calgary, the gold standard for animal control, doesn't single out certain breeds either.

"Obviously breed-specific legislation hasn't worked. What's the benefit to increasing it?"

But the report states pitbulls are responsible for the largest number of bites of any breed since 2007. The breed was responsible for at least 12 per cent of the 477 reported bites in Burnaby, a number referred to as "concerning, and further compounded by this breed's potential to inflict significant injuries."

Yet Neratini questions the accuracy of the city's statistics — she said she received different information in a freedom-of-information request — and notes that the number of dog bites has gone up despite the existing vicious-dog bylaw.

"It's time to stop focusing on breed and time to start focusing on responsible ownership," she said.

Residents can submit written comments to the city about the proposed changes until Sept. 20 before council makes a final decision. EMILY JACKSON/METRO

Food truck for dogs? You've got to be ruffing kidding me

Who is in charge here? The pawsitively ridiculous idea got a thumbs-up from, ahem, 'parents' of fur babies

It doesn't get much more Vancouver than this: a food truck just for dogs.

It's a ruff life out there and on Tuesday Fido and friends had a whole day to get their chow from Iams' So Good! Doggie Café at downtown Vancouver's Granville Plaza.

One high-profile city dweller barked her approval.

A man's best friend indeed

"To most dog owners ... (your dog is) your best friend, your daughter, your son."

Iams spokesman Phil Louis

"I think it's a great concept," said Real Housewives of Vancouver star Mary Zilba, who brought her dog, George, along for some treats. "There are so many dog owners all around Vancouver and if they put one outside a dog park it would be a hit."

Iams spokesman Phil Louis has been travelling on the food truck since Day 1, touring 29 cities across Canada before arriving in Vancouver.

"To most dog owners, your dog is not your pet," Louis said. "It's your best friend, your daughter, your son, and we want them to eat as healthy as possible."

The reaction to the food truck has been great, according to Louis, and it's been such a success they may even bring it back.

Dog owners and their pups were invited to the food truck for a free snack and a chance to win a bag of dog food. SAM SMITH/FOR METRO

Obama pitches Syria strike to Americans

Chemical weapons. U.S. leader advocates diplomacy but insists he will 'be ready to respond' if it fails

U.S. President Barack Obama made an impassioned pitch to Americans on Tuesday night to support his push to punish Syria for purportedly gassing its own citizens, assuring a war-weary nation that a military strike is necessary because "this is not a world we should accept."

"When dictators commit atrocities, they depend upon the world to look the other way until those horrifying pictures fade from memory," Obama said in a televised address from the White House at the end of a day of breakneck developments on the Syrian crisis.

"But these things happened. The facts cannot be denied. The question now is what the United States of America and the international community is prepared to do about it, because what happened to those people — to those children — is not only a violation of international law, it's also a danger to our security."

Obama took to the airwaves amid hopes that a diplomatic solution is at hand, one engineered by Russia, a frequent U.S. antagonist and Syrian ally. Bashar Assad's regime said it's accepted Russia's proposal to place its chemical weapons under international control for subsequent dismantling.

Such a move, if sincerely implemented, could avert the need for American military intervention. The Russian proposal hit a snag later Tuesday, however, when Russian President Vladimir Putin objected to a French proposal involving the United Nations Security Council.

Nonetheless, Obama said he'd asked Congress to postpone a vote on authorizing a military strike in Syria as Secretary of State John Kerry heads to Geneva on Thursday to meet with his Russian counterpart to discuss a possible resolution.

Ponder before you puff. Pot can trigger psychosis in those prone to it: Study

A national study on pot use and psychosis released by the Schizophrenia Society of Canada (SSC) on Tuesday shows the drug can trigger and worsen psychosis in young people already prone to the psychiatric disorder.

The research is part of an SSC project funded by Health Canada that aims to give young people pause before they light their first joint.

"Hopefully it'll inform kids as to whether or not to use cannabis based on a knowledge of their family's (mental-health) history," explained SSC CEO Chris Summerville.

"Does marijuana specifically in and by itself cause a mental illness? No. But does it make your risk greater? Yes."

Summerville said past research has shown young people who are already vulnerable to psychosis are four to seven times more likely to become ill.

Quebec. Charter of Values pits career against faith

Quebec would become the only jurisdiction in North America to impose a sweeping ban on religious clothing for public employees, including at schools, hospitals and courthouses, under a "Charter of Values" whose details were released Tuesday.

If adopted, the plan would apply to hijabs, kippas, turbans and large crucifixes worn by religious public servants.

It would impose a career-or-faith dilemma on judges, police, and prosecutors; public daycare workers; teachers; hospital workers; and employees at state-run liquor stores.

The early reaction suggests the plan will not pass in its present form, which leaves two likely outcomes: It will either be watered down or kept intact for later use as an election issue when the Parti Québécois seeks a majority government.

The minister responsible for the plan presented it as a guarantor of equality within a secular state.

"Quebec is increasingly a multiethnic, multireligious society," said Bernard Drainville. "This is a great source of richness. It's also why we need clear rules."

A woman in a niqab. The ban would also apply to hijabs, kippas, turbans and large crucifixes worn by public servants. RYAN REMIORZ/THE CANADIAN PRESS

The details were swiftly slammed by much of the political class.

The federal government announced that it will seek the advice of the Department of Justice and then head to court if the proposal is deemed to violate fundamental rights.

RAPE NOT ONE OF THE THREE R'S

JUST SAYIN'

Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

So much for higher education.

Here's what school spirit sounds like in 2013: "Y is for your sister"; "O is for oh-so-tight"; "U is for underage"; "N is for no consent" and "G is for go to jail."

That now-infamous rape chant was an integral part of frosh week at the UBC Sauder School of Business and (a similar version at) Saint Mary's University in Halifax this year, and who knows where else — a version was featured in Yale's hallowed Ivy League halls a couple of years ago.

Make no mistake, this chant was led by student leaders. Apparently, that's what "student leader" means. Someone who will lead your kids down the garden path and make them think that raping female children is just frosh hijinks, along with chugging quarts of beer or setting fire to your underpants.

So, parents, you might ask your own freshmen what's on their frosh agenda. Not that they'll tell you, if this is any indication of what they're up to.

You might not believe it if you hadn't seen the video of fresh-faced young men AND women gleefully joining the chant at Saint Mary's. Thanks to social media, there aren't as many dark corners as there used to be. Or, more accurately, the corners are still dark; they're just more likely to be exposed.

The grown-ups allegedly in charge at UBC and Saint Mary's are behaving like deer caught in the headlights. Applying feverish damage control: lots of public declarations of chagrin, frosh-week funding cuts, inquiries and demands for the resignations of the bozos responsible. We'll give them the benefit of the doubt, but let's not be naïve. At Saint Mary's, at least, the chant is a tradition. It's been going on for 10 years.

They're all so surprised the student body has fleas. Maybe it's an honest surprise, not just a butt-covering surprise, but they're too quick, IMHO, to characterize the rape chant as an aberration, something wicked that crept in the back door that somehow hijacked otherwise morally upright kids.

This from the Sauder school dean Robert Helsley: "I couldn't believe it. It's so inconsistent with everything we try to teach our students, and inconsistent with our student body. They are incredibly bright, energetic young people who want to make a positive contribution to society."

Right. Campus Jungle 101: Who wants to be the Lord of the Flies?

Let me put this to every member of the student body: You're only as strong as your weakest link. If you dismiss this as the work of a few harmless troglodytes, just remember that's your sister they're braying about.

For one month of the year in the Alps, a green meadow is transformed into a underwater world by the melting snow of the mountains.

Awesome thaw

- Lake in depth. Twelve metres of water is how deep the Green Lake becomes after snow thaws and water submerges the surrounding grass, trees and park benches. In the autumn and winter the lagoon in the park is normally only one metre deep.
- Green water. The lake's distinctive green hue is the result of the chlorophyll-rich grass and foliage.

While in France a lake turns red

This Austrian water park is not the only unusual yet natural lake phenomenon in Europe.

A lake in Camargue in southern France turns red thanks to an interaction between the water's high salt content and microorganisms. Salt-loving micro-algae called Dunaliella salina feed on the crystals, producing a reddish pink pigment.

@PXAbstraction: Something beyond a spec bump, an (even) uglier iOS and a fingerprint scanner everyone will turn off after a week.

@eh_c: Bundle with fedora, skinny jeans, and Ray-Bans.

@BrianBlatnicki: Simple. Give it killer battery life!!!

@paulvt: Looks like I have to wait for the iPhone6 for DNA analysis and sobriety testing.

Le Cosa Nostra not so serious

New movies. From killers to killers of comedy, the gangster movie genre bends to both sides of the spectrum but never breaks

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

Robert De Niro has played both spectrums of the gangster flick but he returns to the humorous side of the genre with The Family. HANDOUT

For every serious mafia drama like Carlito's Way, there is another film that doesn't take the La Cosa Nostra as seriously.

Gangster comedies like The Gang That Couldn't Shoot Straight and Some Like It Hot are early examples of gangland gigglers.

This weekend Robert De Niro, who won an Oscar playing Vito Corleone in The Godfather: Part II, and Michelle Pfeiffer, who played a gangster's moll in Scarface, team up for The Family, a darkly comedic mafia movie.

The film also features Sopranos star Dominic "Junior Soprano" Chianese and Vincent "Big Pussy" Pastore in a story about notorious crime family the Manzoni's, who find themselves relocated to Normandy, France as part of the witness protection program. Trouble is, they have some difficulty blending in with the locals.

This isn't the first time De Niro has played his tough guy image for laughs. In Analyze This and its sequel Analyze That, he's Paul Vitti, a mob boss who suffers from panic attacks.

To help him through he hires psychiatrist Dr. Ben Sobel (Billy Crystal).

"What is my goal here?" asks the doctor. "To make you a happy, well-adjusted gangster?"

The first movie was a big hit — both commercially and critically, but the second one didn't fare as well. Roger Ebert wrote, "what seemed like a clever idea the first time feels like a retread the second."

In The Whole Nine Yards former hit man Jimmy the Tulip has trouble adapting to life on the right side of the law.

As played by Bruce Willis he's in hiding after ratting out members of Chicago's deadly Gogolak gang.

When his identity is discovered by his neighbour (Matthew Perry) Jimmy has to reluctantly revert to old habits to survive.

"It's not important how many people I've killed," he says. "What's important is how I get along with the people who are still alive."

Years before Pride and Prejudice and Zombies became an unexpected literary hit, Hollywood co-opted the marquee value of Jane Austin's name. Director Jim Abrahams of Naked Gun and Top Secret fame looked to the underworld for the inspiration of Jane Austin's Mafia.

A spoof movie that draws heavily on Martin Scorsese's Casino (and not so much on Austin's oeuvre) it marked Lloyd Bridges' last appearance on the big screen, playing a Mafia godfather.

The flick is a quick watch. It runs for a scant 84 minutes, six of which are taken up with credits.

Demi Lovato's all a-Twitter this year with two book deals

THE WORD
Dorothy Robinson
scene@metronews.ca

Demi Lovato's tweets are being turned into a book, the Macmillan imprint Feiwel and Friends announced on Monday.

"Staying Strong: 365 Days a Year will be a powerful 365 day collection of Demi's most honest, brave and hopeful insights," the press release states.

"Here are her own words, with quotes that inspire her, as well as personal reflections and goals. This is a book for everyone, everywhere, on their own journey who need comfort, inspiration and a reason every day to stay strong."

The book will be available on Nov. 19 with a Spanish edition, titled Se Fuerte: 365 Dias Al Ano on Dec. 3.

A memoir by the singer and actress is also in the works.

Lovato is taking over all media in 2013, it seems. In addition to working on this two-book deal, she'll be judging The X Factor, as well as appearing on Glee this fall. The singer and actress will play a love interest for ex-cheerleader Santana.

"She's playing my love interest, so I'm very, very excited about that. We get to sing a song together," Naya Rivera, who plays Santana, told MTV.

I would not bike 3,000 miles

Just to be the person who did the entire corridor. You're better off choosing a smaller chunk when cycling Quebec's La Route Verte Quebec's 3,000-mile bicycle network, La Route Verte, has attracted plenty of buzz since National Geographic named it the world's top cycling destination in 2007. But who's got time for 3,000 miles? Most cyclists will want to plan a trip for a few days or a week, and that takes, well, legwork.

That legwork unfolded over months and included scrolling through goofily translated French-to-English web pages in search of useful information. It culminated with rides on two distinct routes in late summer: the P'tit Train du Nord (Little Train of the North) rail trail, running for more than 160 km north of Montreal; and a staggeringly beautiful stretch along the St. Lawrence River from Quebec City east toward the Gaspe Peninsula. This route is also a compelling trip by car.

Route Verte, or green way, is a carefully managed network of off-road trails, dedicated bike lanes and quiet country roads, sometimes linked by moderately busy roadways with decent shoulders — nothing too hair-raising. Its routes have shuttle services, and accredited establishments are obliged to offer healthy, hearty food, safe storage for bikes and access to repairs and shelter. Inspectors come around to check on that. It's about as close to being coddled as self-supported cycling gets.

Windswept homes are seen by the river on Ile-aux-Grues in the St. Lawrence River. The island offers quiet roads and stunning river vistas for cyclists and lovers of solitude. CALVIN WOODWARD/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The green way is the easy way

It's about as close to being coddled as self-supported cycling gets.

The P'tit Train du Nord journey went down smooth and easy — call it the milk chocolate dip. About half is paved; the rest is fine-crushed stone. Towns pop up where you need them as you sweep past placid lakes, rushing waters and mixed stands of hardwood and softwood forest.

The St. Lawrence is more intense, an explosion of garden flowers, wildflowers, dramatic river vistas, commanding churches in storybook villages and gastronomic adventures. Call it the Classique Noir dip of the ice cream shop.

In both areas, it's hit and miss trying to converse in English in small towns or rural areas, though easier in cities and at tourist attractions. But efforts by visitors to try even a bit of tortured French are welcomed.

So is Quebec worthy of the world's best biking destination?

The Little Train of the North pulls its weight as an enticing bike trail, probably better than the St. Lawrence for families and anyone who doesn't want to mess with a single car while on the bike. For American cyclists, though, there are equally terrific rail trails that may be closer to home.

Route Verte 1, however, is surely in a league of its own. Its farther reaches will be what draw cyclists back, with a pit stop, of course, for ice cream, if the poutine do the trick first.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A tail of two routes

- P'tit Train du Nord (Route Verte 2). Get off at the shuttle at Lac-Saguay, 20 miles short of Mont Laurier, to do the trail in two days. A gentle downhill slope, pavement and well-spaced amenities makes for an easy 40-plus miles on the first day. The route is lined with pristine wooden outhouses. Yep, outhouses. If you can, check out L'Achillee Millefeuille, a bed and breakfast in La Conception where, for $5, the proprietor will drive guests to Mont Tremblant and retrieve them a few hours later. On day two, aim for 60 miles of cycling. Expect a climb spanning 10 miles.
- Quebec City to Saint-Jean-Port-Joli (part of Route Verte 1). A three-hour drive from Saint-Jerome will put you in Levis, with time to visit Quebec City across the river. A $5 ferry provides an efficient and scenic way to reach Old Quebec and its astonishing architecture, murals and shops — no car necessary. Levis has a few charms of its own. A paved riverside path looking out on Quebec City provides two lanes for cyclists and one for pedestrians. In the testy world of biker-walker relations, this is the height of civilization.

High in protein, low in price

NUTRI-BITES

Proving it's cheap to eat well, deliciously, simply and healthy should be the job of a superhero. But, in the absence of her, here goes.

This soup takes mere minutes to assemble, less than 30 to simmer and provides 17 grams of protein, 78 per cent of your fibre for the day and only 350 calories per serving.

The tea biscuits round it out to a hearty meal.

It's Wonder Soup Woman!

Soup

1. In a very large pot, heat butter over medium heat and add onions, cook 4 min to soften.

2. Stir in lentils, potatoes and carrots. Add broth and water; reduce heat to simmer 20 min. Add basil, salt, pepper, tomato juice, molasses and wine if using. Bring to simmer. Cover, simmer 5 min.

Wheat Germ and Herb Tea Biscuits

1. Preheat oven to 425. F.

2. Stir lemon juice into milk to sour.

3. Stir flours, baking powder, salt, basil and wheat germ together. Cut in butter with 2 knives and mash with a fork until the dough looks like peas. Start with 2 cups of milk to make a stiff dough and work it together into a ball. Do not over work. Add more liquid as needed.

4. Roll out and use a cookie cutter or inverted juice glass to cut small rounds.

5. Bake on a cookie sheet for 10-15 minutes until lightly browned.

Eat cheap (and healthy)

The past three Wednesdays, Metro's Theresa Albert has served up easy to make and healthy recipes that are perfect for families or starving students. Don't forget to look for the final recipes in the series on Sept. 18.

Meetings, memos, and pushups? Yep, it's possible

Finding the time.
Can't find time to get to the gym? Work out on your lunch hour with these tips

MEGHAN GREAVES
TalentEgg.ca

Who wants to wake up an hour early or get home an hour late? Not me, and likely not you either. So, if you're having trouble fitting in your workouts before or after work, when can you?

At lunch. For most full-time employees, you'll have an hour for lunch, which gives you just enough time to get a quick workout in. Not sure if it's do-able? It is. Here's how:

Get everything in order
"I'd like a half-hour workout with a side of shower time and a spinach salad please!" Sounds like a little much right? It is possible, though, with a bit of organization. Pack your work clothes, gym gear and home-made lunch with you all in one bag so it's ready to go. This will make it easy for you to go from one thing to the next.

Intensity, intensity, intensity
Sometimes less is more! It's completely possible to have a short, intense workout if you plan your workouts beforehand. For example, if you're going to the gym three times a week on your lunch break, plan three different workouts to rotate through each day you go (on your phone, cue cards, iPod, etc.).

Who needs a gym?
If there isn't a gym close to your work, you can still get a great workout in by making use of the natural "facilities" all around you. Going for a run, walk, bike, rollerblade or even bringing a yoga mat to the park can be just as effective as hitting the gym.

Stay energized
When working out on your lunch break, it's crucial to hydrate and get the proper nutrients. First of all, working out on an empty stomach isn't healthy. Secondly, you don't want your work to be affected.

Have a small, healthy snack (yogurt, veggies and hummus, apple, etc.) before your workout and eat your lunch after to keep you on your A-game.

Come in a little earlier, leave a little later
When first getting into you lunchtime workout routine, you might take a few minutes longer than expected. To ensure that your career isn't being affected, come in a bit early and don't hesitate to stay a bit later than normal to demonstrate your commitment to your job for your boss to see.

Once you start to get your routine down pat, you should be able to balance everything just fine.

Canucks camp rich in storylines

It's go-time. Players report for fitness testing and physicals Wednesday morning at Rogers Arena

cam.tucker@metronews.ca

The weather outside is beautiful — warm and sunny. But summer is coming to an end, and there is no more profound sign of this than NHL training camp.

The Canucks open camp with fitness testing at Rogers Arena on Wednesday. In light of that, here are three storylines to watch.

TORTORELLA'S TIME

This week will be the first true stamp John Tortorella puts on this team as its new head coach.

A Stanley Cup champion in 2004 as the Lightning's head coach, he's better known of late for his battles with members of the media and unfairly criticizing players publicly, or, as he said in June when he was hired, "I put a couple of players in a bad situation."

The John Tortorella era in Vancouver begins. GETTY IMAGES FILE

Tortorella made the point that he will work toward building a better working relationship with the media. As to his relationship with his new players, well, he's made it clear they're going to be pushed differently than under Alain Vigneault.

"There is certainly honesty that's going to happen with the coach here, but the coach is going to be fair also," said Tortorella on June 25.

RYAN KESLER HEALTHY

For the first time in years, the Canucks' second-line centre is coming to training camp healthy. Does this mean the fiery, speedy man up the middle can revert back to the Selke Trophy form he showed in the 2010-11 season?

BATTLE UP THE MIDDLE

No one will dispute Vancouver's top-two centres, but the third and fourth lines are where the battle for jobs will be.

The Canucks signed Brad Richardson — previously with L.A. — as a free agent and he is expected to compete for a spot, at least based on the comments of GM Mike Gillis in July.

Others who could challenge for third- and fourth-line centre jobs: Mike Santorelli, Jordan Schroeder, Zach Hamill, Brendan Gaunce and Bo Horvat.

Whitecaps remain optimistic about declining playoff chances

What was once an uphill climb toward their ultimate goal of a post-season berth has perhaps become too rocky and steep.

The Vancouver Whitecaps, with just one win in their last eight games and in a funk that has come at the worst possible time, were on the training pitch at UBC Tuesday, searching for a way to stop this slide.

It's eerily similar to the late-season collapse a year ago.

Only last year, the Whitecaps had managed to build up enough of a cushion in the standings during the middle part of the season and the Western Conference wasn't nearly as competitive, which allowed them to get back into the playoffs.

In addition to their current woes, the conference has gotten considerably stronger, with eight of the nine teams still vying for only five playoff positions.

Quoted

"There's always a light at the end of the tunnel and I still see the light quite clearly."

Whitecaps goalkeeper David Ousted, on the team making the playoffs.

The Whitecaps reached second place in the conference this summer and were showing signs they might be knocking on the door for the top spot, occupied by Real Salt Lake.

Now, making the playoffs may be too far out of reach. They sit seventh in the West, five points back of Portland for the fifth and final post-season spot.

Their next challenge is another road game — their Achilles heel this season with just two wins away from BC Place Stadium — against the San Jose Earthquakes on Saturday.

Members of the club, at least publicly, remain optimistic.

"I think we've played some not-so-good games but I still feel we have the chance of breaking into the playoffs," said goalkeeper David Ousted. "It's a lot to do with hard work but also keeping it positive."

The 2014 Kia Cadenza

ALL PHOTOS WHEELBASEMEDIA.COM

Review. Kia ditches its features list to finally dote on the all-importants like style, feel and personality

MALCOLM GUNN
wheelbasemedia.com

It's obvious that picking a new Cadenza is supposed to be a no-brainer decision. Not that you won't want to examine it thoroughly before your purchase, but with a generous amount of built-in luxury and convenience hardware/software, picking your colour scheme just might be the only scheming you have to do.

The Cadenza's introduction is a significant one for Hyundai's subsidiary. The brand that once sold mainly small cars and wagons to younger, first-time buyers, has gradually expanded its lineup to include a variety of smartly styled vehicles that look nothing like their Hyundai counterparts.

The Cadenza is a prime example of this philosophy. It's similar in size to, and shares the same stretched architecture as the Hyundai Azera, a model sold only in the U.S. However Kia design boss Peter Schreyer (a rock star in the automotive design world) has taken a totally unique approach in shaping the Cadenza's sheetmetal. His efforts have yielded a subtle-looking sedan that conveys a greater sense of class and polish than the Azera with its trendier looks. Clearly the Cadenza is Kia's attempt to gain favour with more mature buyers who place pampering content on their must-have list.

Pushing the starter button engages a 3.3-litre V6 with 293 horsepower and 255 pound-feet of torque and connected to that V6 is a six-speed automatic transmission with steering-wheel-mounted paddle shifters.

Although the Cadenza seems to be geared for older buyers, the car's "sport-tuned" suspension is somewhat firmer than that of some of its competitors, but still returns a good ride without a lot of clattering from underneath. The electric power-steering rack is responsive and tends to skitter around the highway much less than in some other rides with similar tech.

The base Cadenza with its out-the-door price of $39,400 (less taxes) piles on the goodies with a leather-fitted interior, 10-way power-adjustable driver's seat and dual-zone climate control with front and rear-seat ventilation. There's also a navigation system with eight-inch touchscreen display, rear camera with backup warning and a 550-watt Infinity sound system.

The Cadenza Premium adds a panoramic sunroof, power rear sunshade, heated steering wheel, front and rear heated seats with upgraded soft-leather covers, electronic parking brake and a power-tilt-and-telescoping steering wheel. Unfortunately, the Cadenza cannot be ordered with all-wheel-drive, but since it isn't offered on any Hyundai/Kia sedan, that's no surprise.

Fully optioned, the Cadenza brushes up against the $45,000 mark. That means it's now trespassing on territory staked out by the bigger rear-wheel-drive Hyundai Genesis as well as a number of other established luxury sedans. That probably won't bother Kia's buyers who will see the Cadenza as an honest, straightforward luxury car, minus the pretense and posturing of competing marques.

And that makes it a no-brainer in every sense of the word.

Fuel Economy

Pulling away from a stop, the powerplant balks at being pushed too hard, likely in the interests of maintaining its city fuel-consumption rating of 11.2 l/100 km and the highway figure of 7.4. When you're rolling, it gathers itself up quickly and pushes you back in the seat with ease.

Interior design

The interior design work is low-key, but is right in step with most luxury-oriented models. The hardware and trim are first-rate and the big and round gauges are easy to read. There's no shortage of dashboard and steering-wheel switches and buttons to fiddle with, but at least they're clearly marked.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
You can charm the birds out of the trees today, but your long-term interests would be better served if you charm a wage rise out of your boss. Make sure you know your own value, and make sure you get it.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
If you let others make decisions for you today, their efforts are likely to fall short of what you require. Whatever tasks come your way, do them yourself.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
The challenges coming your way may be tough but you have what it takes to make the best of them, by getting the best from yourself.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
If you need to enlist other people's help then speak up. As Venus moves into the most dynamic area of your chart, you will find ways to bring your charisma and can-do spirit together. It's a winning combination.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Even Leos find the going tough sometimes and if you have a problem of some kind today, you must ask for help. The longer you pretend everything is going fine, the bigger the fall-out when it all gets too much.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You have a way with words but sometimes you say too much or speak in too aggressive a tone. With Venus moving into the communications area of your chart today that isn't a problem though.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You need to find a way to strike a better balance between work and family issues. If you know you won't be able to meet certain obligations then say so.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Petty victories are just that — petty. As of today, you must raise your sights and focus only on battles that are worthy of your talents. One major battle won is worth a thousand skirmishes of no consequence.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You may have to do something you don't much enjoy but if you adopt the right attitude and do a good job, you may be surprised how rewarding it is.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Confidence is your most potent weapon and if you act as if nothing can possibly go wrong, today most likely nothing will. The universe has a way of rewarding those who take a carefree, can-do attitude to life.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Your prospects are getting better and with values planet Venus moving into the career area of your chart today, the powers that be will look on you kindly. If you have a dream, let the world know.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
This should be a wonderful time, especially if you are on the move. Whether you travel to the far side of the Earth or just down the road to see a friend, love and laughter will go with you every step of the way. SALLY BROMPTON
